New Facility and Equipment for QCI

Philadelphia, PA July 14, 2006 - Quaker Chroma Imaging, a graphics printing company located at 1025 Arch St. for the past 34 years, is moving to a larger facility in Moorestown, New Jersey on Monday July 17, 2006. Additions to their current services of fabric and short run printing, window/floor graphics, posters, photographs, scans, and mounting will be made in their new home.

The collection of three innovative technologies, in conjunction with QCI's current services, will give clients the freedom to create unique marketing pieces that can convey messages in unusual and creative ways. The new equipment includes: a 10' wide dye sublimation printer that will make QCI the only company in the area with the equipment to sublimate to fabric in grand format sizes, a state of the art flat bed printer that gives clients the option of printing directly onto almost any substrate in all colors including white, and a digital die cutter that can cut almost any material into precise and intricate designs.

Co-owner Craig Tinkelman said, "We are very excited about our future. The new location and addition of equipment is the first stride of many that QCI is taking to help our clients stand out." QCI will have several open houses to give people the opportunity to see their technology and how it can benefit them. For further information, contact Haley Dervinis at 215.922.4444.
