CETRA® Launches Interpretation Division

Elkins Park, PA – September 4, 2007

CETRA, Inc., a privately held language services provider headquartered in the Philadelphia area, is pleased to announce the launch of its interpretation division. While CETRA specializes in high-quality translations of printed and electronic documents in all world languages, the addition of interpretation to its portfolio will expand its suite of language services.

In response to growing demand from clients, CETRA has begun to offer consecutive, simultaneous and escort interpretation. By drawing from its vast resources of highly proficient linguists from around the world, CETRA can now provide on-site and remote interpretation in virtually any language. While the services will be of immediate benefit to its core client base, which consists of global marketing research and government agencies, CETRA has also experienced a sharp increase in the demand for interpreters within the legal, technical, HR, and health industries.

Jiri Stejskal, President of CETRA says:

“Adding interpretation to our portfolio of language services is a logical step in providing turnkey solutions to our clients. We pride ourselves in working with professional linguists, because we know that translation and interpretation errors can be costly, even disastrous. You always need a qualified, professional translator or interpreter to get it right.”

CETRA was founded in 1997 by Jiri Stejskal, Ph.D., a professional translator and language teacher. Jiri Stejskal also serves as the President-elect of the American Translators Association (ATA).

A holder of the GSA Schedule for Language Services, CETRA serves the needs of the Federal Government.

Government agencies and private companies interested in translation and interpretation services can contact CETRA by phone at (215) 635-7090, by email at info@cetra.com or visit the CETRA website at www.cetra.com.
